The director of this documentary, Nikos Anagnostopoulos will be present as will the well-known journalist Giannis Tzanetakos and they will participate in the discussion following the film. The War Archive is delighted to be hosting this event as the «Polk Case», which caused a major political scandal at the time, May 1948, while Greece was still in the throes of the civil war, continues to stay unresolved and puzzling.

George Polk as an accredited CBS journalist whose task was to interview leading members of the «rebel» Democratic Army, led by the KKE, the communist party of Greece, and posing a major threat to the government of Greece at the time.

Polk was shot dead in Salonica with the authorities blaming his death on the communist party and arresting suspects who turned out to be unrelated to the killing. Later investigations turned up evidence that Polk's presence in such a difficult time for Greece was inconvenient for various interests and countries, but not perhaps to the extent of having him killed. The case evolved over time to a veritable thriller with fiction films being made about it as well as documentaries and books dedicated to solving the case.
