For the Arheion, this is a very special occasion as Annita, five years ago, presented to us what was the general outline of her book, brought us up to date with her research two years ago and now is presenting to us here truly monumental research effort on an area of Greek history hardly explored. The tragic history of the Greek Jews has been explored in detail and their fate was monstrous as they were sent to camps specifically to be killed. Far less is known, until now and after Annita's efforts, about the thousands of non-Jewish Greeks who also experienced the brutality and death of these camps and prisons but for different reasons rather than racist extermination. Their voices and histories are now been heard and their experiences recounted.

Annita studied English and Greek philology in the Universities of Athens and Crete. Her original research interests and publications focused on travel literature. Aside numerous academic publications, she has also published four books on fiction, one of which for children.
